The essays collected in this volume focus on Aristotle's notion of nous (usually translated as "intellect", "mind" or simply "thinking") in Aristotle's works. They aim at elucidating the status and the function of the intellectual faculty in the context of Aristotle's analysis of the faculties of the soul and, more generally, of his conception of science. The volume also contains an overview on the origin and the evolution of the meaning of the term nous before Aristotle.

Giovanna Sillitti is a former associated professor in Theoretical Philosophy at the Department of Philosophy of the University of Rome "La Sapienza". Her work is mostly dedicated to the Presocratics, Plato and Aristotle.

PhD in Philosophy, Fabio Stella is currently associated researcher at the ISTA (Institut des sciences et techniques de l'antiquité) at the University of Franche-Comté. His work is mostly dedicated to the origin and the development of the greek verbs of knowledge and to the notion of "noûs".

Francesco Fronterotta is associated professor in the History of Ancient Philosophy at the Department of Philosophy of the University of Rome "La Sapienza". He works on the Presocratics, Plato and the Platonic tradition.
